A Funeral Sensation.

A very sensational scene took pisce at the funeral of a wealthy jeweller, nem-d Robert J. Smith, Monday, at Pittsburg, Pa. In the morcing, among the numerous carriages which drove up to the house of the dead was one containing the wife, from whom he had been divorced several months ago. When the carriage door opened in front of her former husband's house the woman stepped out and rang the door bell. One of the family saw her and slammed the door in her face. The coffined remains were removed to the Twenty lifth Street Methodist Courch and placed in the middle aisle among the mourners. The woman was not permitted to come near the coffic and during the ceremonies stood beside the pulpir. During the sad services she burst into tests and exclaimed frequency, "My husband! O, my husband!" There was no one near her, while she wept bitterly, and was conscious that she was re-McCready, paster of the congregation, officiated. When the address closed the lid was removed from the glass of the casker, and the minister invited those present to look for the last time on the face of the dead. The woman who during all this time was seeming y more affected chan soy one else in the church, m ved frantically toward the coffin, and was within a few teet of it when Mr. Smith, a brother of the decrased, threw his arms over the glass face and prevented her from looking to, remarking. "Go back, keep away; you caonot see him." Rev. Mr. McCready motioned hor to leave, and said: "Go away; you have no right to see him and you shall not see him." The woman made a desperate eff rt to get to the coffin, screaming: 'On, my God! I must Mrs. Smith, the mother of the deceased, erger ed her to leave, and Miss Smith, her daughter, shou id: "Stay away; you ruised my brother. and you can lot look at him in spite of y u! TEBRUBLE ADVENDERE. - Gessi Pacha, the late Governor of the Bahr l'Ghazal, recently Va., wholesale and retail agents. Orders by returned to Khartoum from an expedition in the interior of Africa, after a journey of the most terrible horrors and sufferings, has since died. Having effectually broken up the numerous slave trading stations in his province he lefe Port Rek, on the Gezelle River, on September 25, with a sidewneel steamer, having four large barges in tow, filled with over five buodreu soldiers, their families, liberated slaves and others. They took but one month's provisions along, as the trip to Khartou n, even for sailing vessels, usually lasts only twenty days. This flotills, however, was soon stopped from advancing by the vegetable dams of thickly matted grass, papyrus and ambatch reeds, which, as so often before, completely obstructed the river, and will, therefore, always prevent the Bahr el Gh-zel from becoming a permanent waterway. For over three and a nal months the expedition was kept prisoner in this terrible position, all efforts co free it were ineffectual, and the far distant shores could not be rescaed on account of impassable swamps and bogs. The provisions were soon exhausted, and famine and poisonous fevers began to decimate the people. The dead bodies would neither sick nor float away, but remainded near the boats, filling the sir with postileutial stench. In this dire extremity many of the bodies were used as food by the famished survivors hesides such grasses as could be gathered. One of the barges had to be broken up for firewood. At last succor arrived on January 4 in the shape of a powerful steamship commanded by Marca, who had been disparched from Khartoum to their delivery. He succeeded in breaking through the thick felt of vegetation and rescued Gessi and about two hundred and fifty men all who had survived, from a certain death. Reports say that the I alian Prens formerly one of the strongest mealiving, look ed like a skeleton when he returned. He brought with bim a nepbew of King Munza, of Monbuitu, as well as three encuchs, who were to serve as witnesses against Yu-off Pacha, the Governor of Sensar, who in 1876 had the King and his brothers killed, their sous emasoumted and their daughters sold as barem slaves.
